Helen Hartness Flanders (1890-1972) was a "song-catcher" who devoted her life to collecting and preserving New England folk music culture. From 1930 to the late 1950s, she collected over four thousand field recordings of folk songs, fiddle tunes and stories. Her collection, currently housed at Middlebury College in Vermont, is a treasure trove of living history. Singer-storyteller Jack DesBois breathes new life into the old folk songs of the Flanders Collection. In this program, he shares the songs in all their delight, horror, humor and gravity, inviting audiences into a conversation about the enduring role of folk music in our world today.

Independent school educators of faith—and especially boarding school faculty—labor in immersive communities that, day in and day out, wrestle with how to create and maintain flourishing school environments. As believers, they wrestle too with how to dwell and delight in a strange land. This post-conference session, for independent boarding and day school educators, will pick up on the content of the conference and suss out takeaways for returning to their respective institutions and the new academic year. Retired faculty are also warmly invited to stick around for the follow-up session.
